Our hospitals are doing their best,
but they are in logjam and it’s costing lives.”

Dr Sarah Whitelaw,
Federal AMA Emergency Medicine Representative

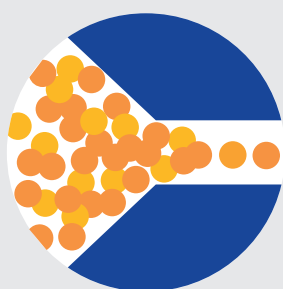

Our public hospitals are in logjam. Ramped ambulances can't offload patients to emergency departments because they are already full. There are just not enough beds or staff to deal with the demand and waits for essential surgery grow longer. The cause of the logjam is insufficient government funding.

The performance of our public hospitals has been declining for several years, and with COVID-19 they are at the breaking point.

Our hospitals need to be funded for the future, to fix the current logjams and keep Australians healthy and out of hospitals.
